BEGIN WORK OF INVESTIGATING KAM. SCHOOLS

Two Visits to Institutions Have Been Made By Members of Committee

In a preliminary way the committee appointed by Circuit Judge Ashford to investigate conditions at the Kamehameha Schools already has begun its work. Mrs. Emma Nakulua and Attorney J. Lightfoot having attended services at the school chapel last Sunday, where they were received cordially.

Attorney Lightfoot visited the school yesterday to obtain certain documents. "President E. C. Webster was very courteous, gave me what I wanted and said that the committee would be welcome at any time," he said today.

The third member of the committee, Attorney D. L. Withington, returned to Honolulu today, and the investigators probably will hold their first meeting at an early date to outline the investigation. The results of their work will be contained in a final report to Judge Ashford. The committee will not confer with Judge Ashford unless so requested, or unless further instructions are wanted.

Attorney Lightfoot says the investigation should be finished within two months.

A 13-ton caterpillar tractor dropped through a three-ton bridge on the road leading from the Waimanalo road to Kailua yesterday, most effectively blocking all traffic. It was especially disagreeable for a large party from the Kamehameha schools that had planned to spend the day at Kailua and had to turn back. Traffic from the Kailua side was compelled to travel a rough and dangerous road along the coast to Kaneohe and approach the Fall from that direction.

YOUNG AMERICAN, SON OF OFFICER HERE, AT FRONT

for a commission, and at the first opportunity he was made second lieutenant and a month later he was commissioned captain and made adjutant of the regiment, a position requiring the military knowledge and training which he was one of the few who possessed.

Ability Attracts Attention His enterprise and ability attracted the attention of Sir Samuel Hughes, minister of militia for Canada, and in May he was advanced to the rank of major, his commission dating back to January. Meanwhile the ranks of the American Legion had been filled, the raw recruits had been armed, drilled and trained in their new duties and the American Legion was ready to sail for England to become part of England's expeditionary forces. Maj. McRae wrote a letter to his family, enclosing his new address in London and saying that they had been ordered to sail on May 28, nor the next day, nor the next. And as the days and weeks went by it became known that the regiment was not likely to sail soon. The organization remained and still remains in Canada.

Wanted to See Service But not so Maj. McRae. He had enlisted to see service in the great war, and he did not propose to stay in Canada while there was any way to get out. So he resigned his commission in the legion and took passage for Liverpool, arriving there about August 15. He went at once to London and found that Sir Samuel Hughes was on an official visit to the minister of war. So Mr. McRae, having resigned his majority, again reported to that officer, and he was at once transferred as major from the American Legion to his majesty's 23rd Battalion of Infantry. His first duty after his transfer was a tour of inspection and instruction among all the British forces in France. Here he learned the new methods of trench warfare—the art of keeping reserves in bomb-proof trenches, of throwing hand-grenades, of making and destroying barbed wire defenses and charging them with electricity so that they were as deadly as a French 75 shell—all these and many more of the secrets of war that have been learned by the British army in the past two years were explained to the new officers on this trip before they were sent into active service.

In a letter written while on this trip, Maj. McRae informed his father of the change in his organization and told him that he would call when he entered active service. So now the department adjutant watches the war news—particularly from the western front—with greatly increased interest.

LADIES' ALLIED CLUB WILL MEET WEDNESDAY

Ladies of the Allied Club will hold their second meeting at the Library of Hawaii Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock. This is the club that was recently organized with a view to sending Christmas gifts and Christmas cheer to the men in the trenches in Europe and the meeting that is announced for tomorrow will continue the work of planning that has already been started. One of the matters to be taken up will be the securing of names of soldiers for whom friends and acquaintances desire to make certain that provision will be made.

Bananas	13,512,960
Sisal	20,572,347
Chili Peppers	750,000
Cocoa	22,893,241
Pineapples, crates	1,309,750

Each product is adapted to the climate and soil of Hawaii. Do you want their production encouraged?

This coming election offers the small farmer a remarkable opportunity. It gives him a chance to have himself really represented at Washington by a man who appreciates his needs and who will make continuous effort to have those needs satisfied with proper and adequate legislation.

There are a number of products adapted to Hawaii's climate and soil, which, if given the right protection and encouragement, could be developed into market leaders. If you elect me Delegate to Congress it will be one of my first duties to see that the proper committees are thoroughly informed regarding the possibilities of these products, and that legislation conducive to thorough development is enacted.

That there are huge markets for these products is well borne out by the figures quoted in this space. It's up to you to see that everything necessary to their growth in Hawaii is carried out. You are taking a long step toward that result when you vote for me.

A. L. LOUISSON,
Candidate for Delegate to Congress
